PORT DICKSON

INTRODUCTION

Port Dickson lies in the district of Pantai Laut, one of the districts of Negeri Sembilan. This district offers one of the interesting beaches along the west coast of Peninsular Malaysia. However, the name Port Dickson is more akin to the beaches and resorts. Located on the south-west of West Malaysia and bordered by the Straits of Malacca, the beach has its own famous lagoon near Cape Rachado and is lined with picturesque casuarina trees. The shores along the stretch of the white sandy beaches slope gently into the crystal clear waters making this place an ideal spot for picnicking. Furthermore, the water here is safe as it is not shark-infested.

Site visits to the historical sites and other places of interest pose no problem as transport is efficient and cheap. One can travel along the road from the town proper right up to the 18 kilometres of the sandy beaches. All along the route are hotels of international standard, motels, bungalows, rest houses and condominiums. The rates for these accommodations are reasonable and the facilities provided are convenient for scuba-divers, swimmers, boaters, water-skiers and surfers. Eating-out places are also available along the stretches of beaches, serving varieties of food.

Cape Rachado

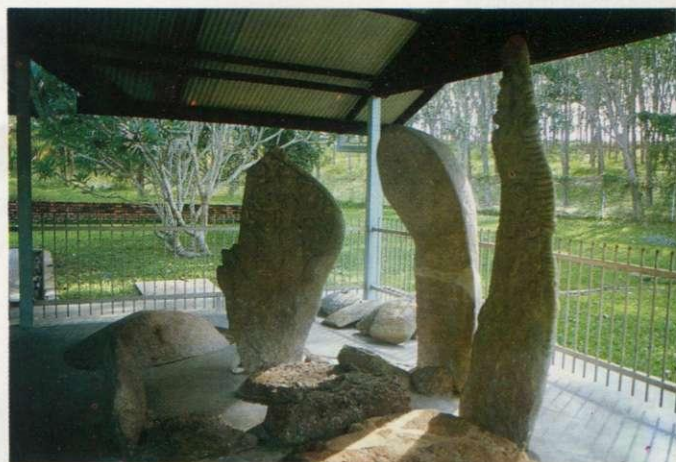

Cape Rachado

Near The Blue Lagoon Resort, on the hill overlooking The Straits of Malacca, is Cape Rachado. Here stood the light house built by an Englishman, where the surrounding is the playground for the monkeys. Viewing from the top, miles and miles of Port Dickson beaches can be sighted and on a clear day the outline of Sumatra can also be seen from here.

Fort Kempas

This historical site is 23km away from Port Dickson. Here, lies the old grave of one of the leading historical personalities – Keramat Ujong Pasir – Ulama Sheikh Ahmad Makhtum. Beside the grave is the famous Batu Bersurat depicting his fight and struggle.

INTRODUCTION

Negeri Sembilan is almost wholly an inland state with only 48km of coastline. It is bounded at the north by Selangor, in the east by Pahang, and the south by Johore and Malacca. Having a total area of 6,645 sq. km, this state is mountainous since it is situated at the southern slope of the Main Range.

BRIEF BACKGROUND

The insight into the Negeri Sembilan state perceives the distinctive style of the Minangkabaus. The unique sweeping buffalo-horn-shaped roof peaks have a strong influence on the modern architectural concept. It has been the pride of the state passion to retain the identity of the past, and the justification of this is borne in the existence of the Cultural Handicraft Complex and the Dewan Undangan Negeri.

Historically, the Minangkabaus were the settlers from Sumatra. Surrounded and ambushed by the Bugis, they seek protection from their homeland, Pagar Ruyong, Sumatra, resulting in the formation of the First Yam (Yang) DiPertuan Besar in 1773. The instability and constant civil wars led to the British Intervention. Places like Sri Menanti, Tampin and Rembau come under the protection of the British. Finally a treaty was signed between the Yang diPertuan Besar, the four major chiefs (Undang) and the British in 1895.

Today Negeri Sembilan is headed by the Yang DiPertuan who exercises legislative powers on the advice of The Executive Council headed by the Menteri Besar (Chief Minister).

The Minangkabaus have been living according to their custom and social system-the adat perpatih, a matrilineal system. Hence the practising of the "Adat Perpatih" in Negeri Sembilan (the only state in Malaysia having the matrilineal system).

Seremban, being the capital of the state, is 64km away and 45 mins drive from Malaysia's capital city, Kuala Lumpur. It is easily accessible by roads and rail.
